Minor Identification Card

- State identification cards will include all the same security features as the driver licenses.

Improved Identity Protection

In June of 2007, Indiana will begin issuing newly designed driver licenses and identification cards. These identity documents will include many advanced and innovative ID security features to fight counterfeiting, photo swapping and tampering. These include a 2D barcode, digitized portrait image and signature and various other security features. Indiana's new card design includes the state map in the header and state seal overlapping the state map in the background.

The security of driver licenses and personal identification credentials plays an important role in addressing issues such as underage drinking and driving and the related impact on roadway safety, the increasing problem of identity theft and fraud, and even homeland security.

By upgrading the security of Indiana's driver license and personal identification card, the state can help protect citizen identity and personal safety. In addition, the new cards will provide retailers and law enforcement with new tools for verifying the authenticity of driver licenses and IDs presented as proof of identity and fighting driver license counterfeiting and fraud.

Constructed from a robust and highly durable and secure composite material, Indiana's new DL/ID is valid for a six-year period from date of issuance starting in 2009. Validity periods for those issued in 2007 and 2008 will likely be five years and four years respectively to be in compliance with federal Real ID requirements.

Indiana's new driver license issuance system includes a number of innovations in driver license security and system architecture to help the state provide enhanced customer service and security to its citizens.
